

Head of Conservation Training

Durrell's Mission is to save species from extinction. This post has prime responsibility for delivering a coherent, scientifically robust conservation training programme to meet the Mission and that is relevant to contemporary conservation needs.

The successful candidate will be responsible for:

- Developing strategies, policies and programmes to train conservation professionals at various levels, from around the world, in the management of endangered species both in captivity and the wild.
- Active management of our training operations in Jersey and overseas, as well as participating in teaching and writing of teaching materials for use in our programmes.
- Our aspirations to enhance and modernise Durrell's training activities, which may include the development of web-based learning.

The candidate will:

- Have as a minimum MSc in a biological or related field together with 2/3 years teaching/capacity-building experience in international settings.
- Be a highly motivated person, with excellent communication, organisation and computer skills.

In return we can offer an attractive remuneration package commensurate with skills and experience.
